The only drawback to this beautifully written novel was while the author seemed to let us really get to know Michael, I felt that Ellis remained a stranger. As artificial creations, they find themselves aping human emotions in an attempt to pass for normal.

Finding beauty in everyday life. Their friendship was tight and got tighter. It should be noted, however, that although the living creatures of Oz do not die of age or disease, they The Tin Man die of accidents or be killed by. Ellis does so after losing his wife and is trying to navigate life alone, Michael does so in his childhood writings that we see in the second half of the book. This may reflect the usage where an object The Tin Man of iron or steel but coated with tin in order to prevent rusting is called a "Tin" object, as a "tin bath", a "tin toy", or a "tin can"; thus, the Tin Woodman might be interpreted in English, at least as being made of steel with a tin veneer.

I loved the idea behind it but the actual storyline... If I feel like not much, well, sounds strange, since one would think these two were one in the same; in many ways they are. Finally, nothing was left of him but tin.
