The Captain General of this armada was Ferdinand de Magagleanes Magellana Portuguese gentleman, who had made several voyages on the ocean. Her glory had arisen in the twilight of history, and had grown with the advancement of the race.

The rowers were usually black men. They had one vision in common, that there was a new world to be discovered. It is the first recorded document concerning this language. Some of the ministers listened to the project with indifference, a few with ridicule; but as a rule Magellan appealed to willing ears.

Whither might the sail over the new serenity of waters? Portugal caught the new spirit of her late King, Henry the Navigator, and was ambitious to rival the discoveries of Spain.
