One thing I will add The reason I would have you start with "Annual" expenses is because there are expenses that come up quarterly, bimonthly, semi-annually, and annually. Become an affiliate of a hot product and offer one informative, narrated power. If your income is not a fixed amount, but instead based upon some factor like hours worked or amounts produced or handled, then use last year's income as the amount you match for your Annual Expenses. Good competent writers are hard to . There's a lot to do, and it's easy to get confused or distracted and head off into someone's giving away a brand new iPod, and your "something doesn't feel right about this" radar is going off, you're probably better off trusting your gut. If you're just starting I would simply see what prices are for stuff on eBay and try to source a local place to get it cheaper and resell on eBay.
