Jesus had been vindicated - and so all those who belonged to Jesus were vindicated as well" I trust and hope that when he completes his huge book on Paul he will include more interaction with men who would agree with him on covenant and eschatology, like Calvin, Owen, Edwards, and so forth. I felt the book was relatively readable despite the long sentences and long words needed to address the topic properly.

The key phrase occurs in 3: All of that leads to the third main point I want to highlight: He is very much a maximalist in this respect.

This leads him to recognize a difference between tradition and scripture, so we can see that Wright doesn't even adhere to his own logic on this point. But the church needs to move forward, not backward, when it comes to critiquing Wright.
