The following story shews him as the friend of man, and the foe of the savage water-horse, and that is his usual character in popular mythology. Long ago, when in Greece, I came upon a lot of peasants dressed in their white kilts, performing their dances. Athair means father, and night according to the ancients was the mother of all things.

LochNessisfullofthem,"buttheynevergouptotheFallofFoyers. A short ballad, taken down from the recitation of an old tailor in South Uist, who is utterly illiterate, and has hardly ever worn a shoe or a bonnet, begins. Another amusement is to whirl a lighted stick so as to produce a circle of fire, but that is forbidden by old dames, who say, "Tha e air a chrosadh," "It is crossed," or forbidden. But what a man sees in the bright, clear white day-light, that is another thing.
